

Build Your Cowork Prompt Library

Five reusable workflows you'll run every week. Use two now.

An operator's leverage compounds when his best prompts stop living in his head. This week you build a library of five reusable Cowork workflows — the recurring jobs of your week — and you put two of them to work immediately. Build the arsenal; then actually fire it.

THE ACTION

- Draft five reusable Cowork prompts for recurring work, such as:
 - The weekly status report.
 - The content brief or first draft.
 - Meeting prep from an agenda.
 - Weekly family or household planning.
 - A research summary on a recurring question.
- Save them somewhere you'll actually find them — a note, a doc, a folder.
- Run two of them this week on real work.
- Refine the two you ran based on what the output got wrong.

A LIBRARY YOU USE, NOT ONE YOU BUILD

The trap is spending the week building a beautiful library and running none of it. Build five, run two. The running is what teaches you.

SCRIPTURE

Proverbs 21:5 — "The plans of the diligent lead surely to plenty." A prompt library is diligence stored up — plans you don't have to re-make every week.
